Re: Tom Lopatosky and LOPCO Contracting

Tom and his company painted my large Victorian house during the spring of 2002. It was a big job for which Tom was the lowest bidder among three. I was skeptical as to what type of job I would get for the money (which was half of the highest estimate). Needless to say, I was pleasantly surprised. Tom's crew put much more time into preparation than I thought they would and much more time on the job, period. Once they started, there was someone working on my house every day, most often three or four guys.

Best of all Tom is a man of his word. Before I awarded him the job, he said he would stand behind his work even if I found something next year that wasn't right. Well, almost a year later (after a hard winter) I did find some things I though the boys had missed. I called Tom, he came over shortly and without a word of argument, he'd agreed to redo the problem areas plus. Now everything looks perfect.

If you have the money to hire the top house painters in Rhode Island, than I would say go ahead and do it. After all, the best is the best. But if you'd like a real good job at a terrific price by a company that really does stand behind its work, I'd say go with Tom in a heartbeat.
