To whom it may concern,

I am writing this letter to provide my highest of recommendations for Tom Lopatosky and his company, LOPCO Contracting.

In the late summer of 2002 I contracted to have my home painted with Mr. Lopatosky and his company. After getting quotes from about half a dozen other contractors, I was impressed with Tom and gave him the job – even though he was not the least expensive of the lot. Having little experience with the type of painting projects my home required, I can honestly say I was a little unsure of what to expect.

A lead paint test was done on my home and revealed that there was lead on the surface. With all that lead has been in the news lately, I was a bit nervous because I have two young daughters and each of my neighbor's has children around the home as well – with one actually running a day care center. I was extremely pleased to see, however, that Mr. Lopatosky's crew took tremendous care in the crucial surface preparation process. All the State of Rhode Island lead paint laws were followed to a "T" and a clean job site was kept on a constant basis. This, as one might imagine, was extremely relieving.

As for the paint job itself, I can easily say that my home went through the transformations of transformations. Since we had moved into the home, my wife and I had had to deal with a color scheme that was as far from what we wanted on the outside of our home imaginable. Now, everything from the soffits to the sash on the windows to the garage has made us the envy of all of our neighbor's. The sheens that Tom recommended with the colors that we picked out (really that my wife picked out) ended up being an unbelievably attractive combination and the application of the products was done with true professionalism.

What was most impressive to me about Tom was his work ethic. After his crew would go home for the day, often Tom, with my permission, would stay himself and keep painting until dark. Finding anybody that one can honestly trust and count on to deliver what they promise these days, especially in the construction trades, is definitely not the easiest of things to do. Tom Lopatosky is without a doubt not only somebody that I can trust, but that I can truly say from first hand experience delivers what he promises. With that, I would like to re-emphasize my highest recommendation of LOPCO Contracting to anybody in the market for a paint job.

Sincerely,
